Dr. Li is a well-trained molecular biologist. He received his Ph.D. in molecular biology in 1990. Then, he continued with extensive postdoctoral trainings in England and America. His research experiences are very broad from plant pathology, bacteriology, virology, and molecular genetics. He has published more than 30 research articles in peer reviewed journals. He has presented his work in many international conferences, workshops. His breakthrough work for the discovery of TBX5 gene, a gene responsible for Holt-Oram syndrome, was published in the prestigious journal Nature Genetics in 1997. Recent years, Dr. Li has worked on applied molecular biology and DNA analytical technologies. Currently, Dr. Li is the DNA Analysis Laboratory Director for EMSL Analytical, Inc. He manages the PCR laboratory on daily basis. He develops new tests for environmental consultants. Dr. Li has strong commitment to apply his expertise for rapid detection of environmental microbes, and addressing related public health issues.
